

The Illumination Called Romance

Romance is a special love that has come to be significant in relationships today. Most couples desire—and even demand—that spark of love that brings joy to their life together. The beauty about romance is that it can exist at every moment of a couples' relationship and, in doing so, give life to that relationship. But, the big question is, how? This question is answered in this 1-day workshop The Illumination Called Romance. What we, heretofore, have failed to understand is that romance is a light, a very special and beautiful light, that illuminates the souls of a man and a woman. In this workshop we will discover exactly what that light is and how to tap into it so that it may bath our own relationships in its beauty.

Many today would rather not think about such things as the Illumination called Romance. They want love to somehow just come to them, their feelings being their guide. Others might try and dominate their relationships without consideration for the spiritual significance of the other. And still others turn the whole thing over to some “higher power,” failing to understand that the love must come from their own hearts. In short, we fail to see that romance is actually a very defined and exacting idea that takes a special effort to bring to consciousness. But that is a part of its joy, in knowing just how special it is and how wonderful it is when we can give it to our beloved without any circumstance ever able to interfere. Come join us in defining and sharing this most special light called romance and illuminate your relationship today.

Thomas Henry Huxley (1825 – 1895) A Liberal Education

Suppose it were perfectly certain that the life and fortune of every one of us would, one day or other, depend upon his winning or losing a game at chess. Don't you think that we should all consider it to be a primary duty to learn at least the names and the moves of the pieces; to have a notion of a gambit, and a keen eye for all the means of giving and getting out of check?...Yet it is a very plain and elementary truth, that the life, the fortune, and the happiness of every one of us, and more or less, of those who are connected with us, do depend upon our knowing something of the rules of a game infinitely more difficult and complicated than chess. It is a game which has been played for untold ages, every man and woman of us being one of the two players in a game of his or her own. The chess-board is the world, the pieces are the phenomena of the universe, the rules of the game are what we call the laws of Nature. The player on the other side is hidden from us. We know that his play is always fair, just and patient. But also we know, to our cost, that he never overlooks a mistake, or makes the smallest allowance for ignorance. To the man who plays well, the highest stakes are paid, with that sort of overflowing generosity with which the strong shows delight in strength. And one who plays ill is checkmated--without haste, but without remorse.
